The Candelaria Fete.

The Sentinel calls upon Governor Adams to state whether or not he promised to present the town of Candelaria with a flagpole, and says: "It is not a flagpole that is in question. It is the Governor's honor." No intelligent person will fail to agree with our contemporary that the Governor's honor is at stake and not the flagstaff. The town ornament has not been planted. It is a custom too prevalent among candidates to make promises during the campaign which after election they have no thought of fulfilling. If the people of Candelaria are to be believed as capable of judging a promise, Governor Adams did offer the flagpole. Still, the Leader will reserve its judgment until Mr. Adams is heard if he intends to speak. Our contemporary assumes to dictate the course which Nevada's Governor shall pursue. In one portion of the article it says: "He has very properly treated the whole affair with the silence of contempt;" and in another paragraph tells him to speak out, but paves the way to a denial by saying "that, when the truth is told it will be found he never made the promise alleged; or if he made the promise its fulfillment has been hindered in some way to give him, thus far at least, an honorable discharge from the obligation." In reply to the assertion of some Democratic sheets that the press has sought to besmirch the reputation for honesty of Nevada's Governor by asserting that he made promises he had no intention of keeping, the Carson Appeal says: "The Governor has earned the reputation for breaking promises, evading issues and resorting to all sorts of trickery to gratify his political ambition. He has not been scurrilously attacked, but only made the subject of deserved criticism. Any man who makes promises he does not intend to keep is open to criticism.—Eureka Leader.

The custom of making promises and not keeping them is altogether too prevalent in this State and Adams is not the only offender. This custom has made this state a rotten borough and a byword abroad. It should be frowned down by all well meaning people, and the press should make an example of the present instance that aspiring politicians may learn a valuable lesson by it.

Some terrible disclosures were made at Paris last month. The police arrested a man named Marteau, who absolutely refused to give any particulars about himself. The prisoner was, however, recognized by other arrested persons and the police with the clues furnished investigated and discovered a most extraordinary conspiracy to commit wholesale murder, in which the mother of Marteau and some young women are implicated. Marteau hired a house near the Boulevard Menilmontant and had a gang of well-dressed young women to persuade men of wealthy appearance to visit them. In a dark passage there was a trap-door, communicating with a cellar, in which there were large knives, newly sharpened, coarse sponges and a tub to receive the blood of the victims. Happily the arrest of Marteau defeated this hideous plot. Several of the young women have already given evidence regarding the murderous enterprise.

The Germans are remarkable for practical economy and benevolence. Hitherto they have accomplished great things by collecting cigar-tips and disposing of them for the benefit of poor children. Now comes a suggestion from the Saxon Industrial Society concerning the collection of cast-off steel pens, to be disposed of for the benefit of workmen's children by procuring their instruction of various kinds. Steel pens are, as we all know, made of the very best steel, which suffers little by use. Instead of throwing away old pens, these might be preserved and gathered and many millions of marks saved by converting them into watch springs, fine knives, etc. Steel filings are carefully saved—why not steel pens, which represent a much greater value? If for nothing else they might be profitably used in the manufacture of ink.
